Mr. R.J. - Scotland.

There are a number of current issues in Scotland which are clearly not being addressed by the First Minister and his Government. For example regular fines of millions paid to the EU for failing to attend to Environment issues and an apparent lack of interest in the main concerns of the Scottish people, which are the same concerns for other World countries, namely secure sustainable employment and a wish to see their country leading the way out of the current World depression.

Some Governments are addressing these issues with the concern and zeal that is required but others, like the Scottish Government, are miserably failing to do so, more interested in achieving their self centered Political aims or, squabbling amongst the Parties to score Political points.

This is an ideal fertile ground for the Office of International Treasury Control to help the people of Scotland, if they have not already done so. If they HAVE done so has the First Minister, or ANY Administrative Official of his Government reacted warmly to that offer? IF NOT, WHY NOT?

The Scots are renowned for their inventiveness, John Logie Baird, MacAdam, Bell etc. etc. there are NO shortages of skills or Projects which will HELP Scotland emerge from its current financial chaos AND support the Environment. Perhaps the time has come when the First Minister should rise above his selfish self centred Political aims, and do his job properly by looking after the Scottish people, their interests and their environment?

Thank you for your question which is much appreciated.

The situation in Scotland is not too dissimilar to several other countries throughout the world, and it is one that is totally unnecessary, but of course, the problem is not only the symptom but also the actual disease of decline and degradation, caused by the ineptitude and retrospective attitudes of the applicable Governments coupled with the selfish self centred political aims of the politicians.

The Scots are indeed, very well known for their inventiveness and innovation, but unfortunately, neither the Scottish Assembly nor the British Government recognise or take advantage of that fact by supporting such inventiveness and innovation. Such recognition would actually assist Scotland and many other countries, to reduce, or even eliminate, some of the problems such as unemployment and under-development, created by the current financial crisis.

Scotland is indeed, fertile ground for such operations as the OITC, but it should be clearly understood by all that we can not assist any country, or its people, if the Government can not assist us to assist them. It does take two to Tango, as the saying goes.

We are fully aware that the degradation in Scotland is increasing year on year. Empty and derelict factories, derelict land, the fishing industry being devastated by the various rules and regulations evolving out of the European Parliament / European Commission, and so much more, all of which is totally unnecessary and which actually affects, in many ways, the people of Scotland, which creates a sense of hopelessness amongst the population. When this happens, the question really ought to be asked as to why the Government is not doing something about it, or, what are the Government doing about it. In general terms, only the Government, or First Minister can answer such a question, which in our opinion should be placed before the First Minister, Mr Alex Salmond, when he least expects it and when it will do the most damage to his own political ambitions. Then and only then will he be forced to do something about it to prevent further embarrassment to himself and his Political Party.

Mr. R.J. - Scotland.

I can confirm to you that the OITC has made an official approach direct to the First Minister, Mr Alex Salmond, of the Scottish Assembly, offering a minimum sum of £50 billion Pound Sterling Investment. This Official approach was based upon protocols applicable to Sovereign Entity to Sovereign Entity relationships. This Official documentation was "Hand Delivered" and personally handed to Mr Alex Salmond, to ensure actual delivery, for which no Official Receipt has ever been received by us, which is "Mandatory" under UN Sovereign Entity protocols.

This indicates to us that neither Mr Alex Salmond, or his own Administration have any idea what to do, or what should be done, relative to International relationships with other Sovereign Entities, or the applicable protocols that must be applied relative to Sovereign Entity to Sovereign Entity protocols under the United Nations regulations. We may as well been dealing with a Class of 5 year old children, who at least show respect for their teacher.

I can also confirm that several other approaches have been made in the past via various Ministers, including the Scottish Members of the European Parliament. However, we do admit that none of the Ministers or Scottish Members of the European Parliament would have had the relevant "Security" level to be able to verify the OITC and therefore, it is possible that they didn't want to put their "necks on the block" and ruin any chances or political advancement that they may have had, irrespective of their duties and obligations to the electorate of Scotland.

We did actually receive a response duly signed by the First Minister, of which the content of same was deplorable and amateurish. His response made it abundantly clear that neither he, or his administration, undertook the proper method of verification, or applied the proper protocols, as definitively explained within our communication. Instead they utilised the .www which is not an official method, satisfactory method, or recognised authority for such verifications which must be fully compliant with recognised standard procedures for Governments. He also failed miserably to apply Sovereign Entity to Sovereign Entity protocols that are applicable between said Sovereign Entities under the United Nations regulations.

How pathetic and unprofessional can someone in Government be, and actually shown to be.

Mr Alex Salmond's response was one that can only be described as impertinent, rude, derogatory, arrogant, ignorant of Sovereign Entity protocols, lacking in concern for Scotland and the Scottish people, unprofessional, amateurish, lacking in consciousness, void of any professional or diplomatic attributes, very careless in the composure of the content, nonsensical, and certainly one that no one person would expect to receive from a First Minister of a Parliamentary Assembly.

In fact, we confirm to you that we did respond to Mr Alex Salmond's communication, seeking a formal written apology, which should also be recorded and registered within his Administrative records. We further advised him to read our Official communication again, and refer to the Videos which were included within our initial Official communication, and view our Web Site, so that he actually understood what he was reading, and then, and only then, should he seek the official procedures from us to undertake a verification. He was given 28 days to respond. NO response has been received to date which is now nearly 56 days in time.

The above clearly shows what sort of Government Scotland has, and how it operates under the leadership of Mr Alex Salmond. When Governments are ignorant of their duties and responsibilities and have their heads in the sand on a continuous basis, what can anyone expect. We really do feel for the people of Scotland, but as the saying goes, "You only get the Government that you elect". The state of the country reflects what sort of Government you have, and the reason Scotland is deeply in decline.

We are still prepared to assist Scotland if Mr Alex Salmond can get his head out of the sand, and show respect to, and for, the electorate, as well as other Sovereign Entities / Nations.

Thank you for your question
